

Tuesday, September 21. 2004

Aus dem Wall Street Journal

"The paper also reports that Sun Microsystems is planning to launch a service aimed at customers who have computers but sometimes need additional capacity. Sun will charge customers USD1 for each hour they use one of the company's computers. The utility computing service partly aims to compete with IBM's "on demand" computing program and HP's "adaptive enterprise" initiative. " (entnommen electricnews.net)

Posted by Joerg Moellenkamp in English, General at 11:44