

Tuesday, April 17, 2007

Apple's new kick-butt file system

The rumoured Apple's new kick-butt file system is our new kick-butt filesystem ZFS. Robin of StorageMojo talks in his new blog at ZDNet about some implications of this development. Interestingly the comments of this blog entry shows how many people stick to the old mind set storing data on rotating rust, unable to see that stuff works a little bit different when you look at the problem at a different angle.

Posted by Joerg Moellenkamp in English at 10:28