

Sunday, June 10, 2007

I want one ...

I hate the Apple marketing department ... i want one ... soon

Posted by Joerg Moellenkamp in Apple, English at 12:10

I think the iPhone will cause the same syndrom like the iTunes: it's not the best prodcut, but because of the good marketing from Apple, people will like it.

The iPhone has still some disadvantages:

- no UMTS support
- no J2ME support
- only signed applications can run

I'm really wondering, how good the phone functionalities are. I hope they will not have the same problems like Microsoft.
Anonymous on Jun 10 2007, 16:09

As i wrote some time ago: In an web services environment, all you need is a webbrower. The iPhone is the monitor, keyboard and mouse in the web 2.0 age, not the computer, the application runs in the network. So the iPhone is only the mindset of web 2.0 in a mobile.

But the lack of UMTS is really a problem here in Europe. Hope, they will change it until the the availability in germany.
Anonymous on Jun 10 2007, 16:22

Personally, I wouldn't take one in a present... in fact, I'd happily smash every cellphone in existence with my bare hands
Anonymous on Jun 16 2007, 23:08

When your company "forces" you to have a mobile phone, i want the most-gadgetgeek-appealing one available
Anonymous on Jun 16 2007, 23:14