

Thursday, January 10. 2008

Netnewswire 3.1 for free

I read almost 300 RSS-feeds (many of them are low-volume/high quality feeds, thus this isn't such a problem). So i started to search for an good tool for reading my feeds shortly after discovering more and more interesting feeds. Well, i use Netnewswire for years now. After playing around with some tools, i finally took my credit card and bought a license. It was the tool i missed when i was without a mobile mac.

You can download Netnewswire 3.1 for free now. Give it a try. It was worth it's price, and for free it's an even better deal.

Posted by Joerg Moellenkamp in Apple, English at 13:43

Well, they collect your data for offering it for free: <http://www.macophilia.de/netnewswire-ab-sofort-kostenlos/>
Anonymous on Jan 10 2008, 14:40

They transmit the attention data only in case you use syncing, and even then you can switch it off.
Anonymous on Jan 10 2008, 15:06

Isn't that what makes the whole setup so interesting? You use NetNewsWire at home, Go! on your mobile and the web app at work, and all gets synced... giving the service out for free makes this even more attractive, at the price of allowing them to use the attention data.
Anonymous on Jan 10 2008, 17:44

There is a checkbox "Include attention data when syncing". You can deactivate it.
Anonymous on Jan 10 2008, 18:39

Danke den Tipp.

Wow...300 RSS-Feeds!
Hast Du ne Top10?

Gruß
Anonymous on Jan 11 2008, 17:02