

Thursday, April 10, 2008

Being partisan

Sometimes it's really easy to see, if a writer is partisan. Okay, i'm pro-sun ... that's obvious and i'm admitting that. Hey, i'm working for Sun. But i saw a really nice example for an partisan "independent" writer. He criticize some design decisions at UltraSPARC T2+over a length of two paragraphs. That's okay, but it throws an interesting light, when you celebrate a watercooled IBM p575 in a nonstandard formfactor of 23" width as the way to go in computing at the same time.

But, hey ... it was pretty obvious that TPM is heavily IBM biased before as i'm biased for Sun. But at least I don't pretend to be independent

Posted by Joerg Moellenkamp in English, The IT Business at 08:06