

Friday, October 12. 2012

Inflight use of mobile phones

I really like the announcement of Emirates to allow inflight use of mobile phones on their A380 fleet, because it's the easiest way to obtain trade secrets and internal company gossip. It's almost impossible not to hear them when people start to shout them into their phones.

Posted by Joerg Moellenkamp in Business Travel, English at 09:42

As a matter of fact they already allowed that when I was flying with one of their A380s in May. The problem is that the service is so out-of-your-mind expensive that actually no one is gonna use it ... worse than in-flight wifi.

But you might be right, the only ones using it might be those corporate dorks you are talking about, and, let's face it, that's some good entertainment for all of us

Anonymous on Oct 12 2012, 10:43

Well, the only difference is that people will now have more often the chance to get in conflict with business privacy rules. But these situations have occurred in the past as well when colleagues were travelling together, which is fortunately happening less often.

PS: love the entertainment, too

Anonymous on Oct 12 2012, 15:39